ABSTRACT

A key debate in the management education literature has been around the role of Business Schools within the university environment in developing leaders and Managers. Most recently the concept of Emotional Intelligence (EI) in management and Leadership based on competency theory has gained considerable ground in management education and organizational development.

A final product presented in this research paper is a leadership and management learning and development model based on attributes of practice drawn from the coded interviews. The study of international management is concerned with managerial issues related to the flow of people, goods and money with the ultimate aim of managing effectively in global business. The need to have an overarching sense of Systemic Focus to assess Interdependence, risk and relationships within the demands of leadership and Management practice.
