

DEPICTION OF DISPLACEMENT AND ALIENATION AS THE COMMON THEME IN KIRAN DESAI'S THE INHERITANCE OF LOSS AND ANITA DESAI'S VOICES IN THE CITY

Parvaiz Ahmad Bhat

Ph.D. Research Scholar

Department of English Vikram University, Ujjain

ABSTRACT

Indian writing in English is worldly accepted genre of literature. This form of literature is very much old. As you know Indian was under British rule and Indian authors did not get much chance before independence, but after independence there are many Indian English writer who produced a plenty of literature in different forms. There are not only male authors who wrote for the sake of country, but there are female authors who gave the equal contribution to the world literature. They depicted the different issues of the society and well as the issues related to those who emigrated from their country. Those people, who left their country by some reason, feel some problems in the adopted land. The novelist Kiran Desai and Anita Desai depicted there problem very boldly in their respective novels. They highlighted the issues of alienation, belongingness and diaspora. The present paper aims to explore the Displacement and Alienation as the common theme in Kiran Desai's The Inheritance of Loss and Anita Desai's Voices in the City.

KEY WORDS: Alienation, Belongingness, Diaspora, Expatriate and Exile.

CONCEPT OF ALIENATION

Alienation is a tough term to define. Literally, it means separation and estrangement. It has numerous meanings. According to the Britannica Perspective, "An alienated man is . . . stranger to himself; he has lost his essence; he is always in search of his being" (129). Edwards Paul connotes alienation as "an art or the result of the art through which something or somebody becomes (or has become) alien (or strange) to something or somebody else" (76). According to Encyclopedia Britanica, "a term used with various meanings in philosophy, psychology, theology, and social sciences, usually with focus on personal powerlessness, normlessness,, meaninglessness, social isolation, cultural estrangement or self-estrangement" (243). Part of the difficulty of providing an adequate analysis of this concept is that the term occurs in such a wide variety of disciplines, including sociology, philosophy, psychology, existentialist philosophy, feminism and so on. Thus, it may be said that the concept of alienation is widespread and hardly there is any discipline which has left untouched by this.

SENSE OF BELONGINGNESS

On the other hand, displacement, unfortunately, rarely has a definitive terminus, for it seems to perpetuate itself. The displaced often suffers from an almost-pathological wanderlust. Successive migrations prevent the formation of tenacious roots and disregard the laws of gravity. Continually roaming and shifting, migrants simply float, incapable of being attached to something as palpable as land. This freedom, however, becomes a burden, almost like Kundera's The Unbearable Lightness of Being (1984).

DIASPORIC NOTION

In recent years, the meaning of the term diaspora has been extended to refer to situations other than the experiences of the Jewish community outside their homeland. In recent times, diaspora refers to the displaced communities of people who have been dislocated from their native homeland. It comprises an idea of up-rootedness from homeland, a place from where the displacement and dislocation occurs and the narrative of the ruthless journeys of the migrants begins. The process of the survival of the diasporic individual 'in-between' the 'home-land and host-land' is the voyage undertaken in the whole process of 'alienation'. Stephen Gill, India born Canadian poet and novelist have remarked, "Diaspora essentially is a bitter experience of dislocation that leads to alienation, a sense of loss and nostalgic desires. It refers to that particular class of immigrants who are unable to go back . . . Usually, Diasporas are not happy anywhere, and suffer silently . . . (qtd. in Nilanshu Kumar Agarwal 32). The term 'Alienation' also has revived and achieved great heights in terms of expatriate inhabitants or migrant population in second half of the twentieth century. Due to the diasporic writing of these displaced people, the theme of alienation has again become prominent. Thus, it can be said that alienation and displacement are interconnected and inter-related terms as both affect each other and at the same time they get affected.

Emigration and Expatriation

As Vijayashree sums up the expatriate condition in his essay, "The Politics and Poetics of Expatriation: The Indian Version(s)":

The phenomena of emigration and expatriation are by no means new but their scale in the present times is dramatic. The growing incident of expatriation, particularly in the post-colonial societies in the second half of the twentieth century, and the psychic states attendant upon the awareness of connections and disconnections it effects, however, constitutes a contemporary phenomenon. This experience of inhabiting two geographical and cultural spaces simultaneously is wrought with subtle and involuted tensions which get polarized into patterns such as dislocation vs. relocation, domicile vs. diasporic consciousness, and dispossession vs. integration, heritage vs. hybridity and exile vs. involvement. (qtd. in Kripanath Mishra 147- 48)

Diaspora may refer to intra-national as well as international migration. It refers to the movements of people from one territory to another, either within or without national boundaries. Thus instances of displacement whether internal or external compel us to rethink the ways in which dominant understandings of displacement imagines place. The 'sense of place' or more specifically the 'absence of the sense of place' as the referent of the fixed identity of the displaced induces a sense of alienation. As place is consistently important both as the location of the narrative and the imagined homeland to which protagonist look for a sense of belonging. Displacement presumes an attachment to a given landscape and that landscape becomes the anchor for bonds of kinship and religion, for livelihood and provisioning, for memory, identity and being- it becomes a socially-inhabited place. These displaced people have nothing with them to cherish, but only to mourn. These displaced people constantly struggle to craft a sense of place but failed. Apart from that, displaced people are highly vulnerable. They suffer from discrimination, experience significant deprivation and are frequently impoverished. Marginalized within their own society and facing the emotional trauma of their uprooting experience, displaced people turn into excluded people who suffer loss of economic opportunities, breakdown of cultural identity, loosening of social and familial structures, interruption of schooling and increased poverty levels. They also suffer from grief relating to dead or missing family members and, in extreme cases, resort to delinquency and begging in order to survive. According to Michael Cernea, "Displaced people confront eight main risks of impoverishment: landlessness, joblessness, homelessness, marginalization, morbidity, food insecurity, loss of access to common property assets and social disarticulation" (qtd. in Mathur 167-68).

TREATMENT OF DIASPORA BY ANITA DESAI AND KIRAN DESAI

Anita Desai and Kiran Desai both have dealt with the themes of alienation and displacement in their respective novels. This problem of an individual who feels emotionally and spiritually alone forms the backbone of both of the novelists' theme in their respective novels. This is a dominant theme in Anita Desai's novel Voices in the City and Kiran Desai's The Inheritance of Loss but their dealing with this theme is quite dissimilar. This may be due to generation gap, different upbringings, different social and cultural surroundings, difference in cognitive level, and the most important, the time during which they have been writing. As it is difficult to deny the effects of time in making of the mind of an author, because an author's personality doesn't mould in the vacuum but by the main currents around him/her and both the writers are not the exceptions.

Anita Desai started writing in 1950s when India had achieved freedom from British rule. As the euphoria of independence evaporated, the focus in the Indian English novels shifted from the socio-political milieu to the exploration of individual's interior world and his existential dilemma. As according to Harish Raizada, "The waves of idealism and political fervor which had enthused Indian writers in pre- independence period were ebbed away . . . Like the European existential writers of the post- second world war period, they felt frustrated, alienated and isolated . . ." (128).

The post 1950s witnessed a number of major women writers in English like Kamala Markandya, Ruth Pravar Jhabvala and Nyantara Sahgal, but Anita Desai carved out a special niche for herself. Anita Desai epitomizes the emerging women's search for fulfillment, their feelings, quests for identity, aspirations and agonies- an act which challenges the basic tenets of culture and tradition of her time. Pursuing his dreams single mindedly, and confining women to the periphery of the 'masculine' world, Nirode in VC reflects the arrogant dominance of Indian man in the 1950s. In portraying the character of Amla as opposed to Monisha, Anita Desai seems to refute with Indian women who, "nothing in her heart but a stupid sense of injury and affront", a women who, after the country's independence went "back to old beauty sleep of neglect and delay and corruption" (VC 81) because of her 'slave' mentality. Even after their great contribution to freedom struggle, their contribution is not recognized. Also she points out the frenzied rush of the villagers to city life, where they achieved nothing but disappointment.

KIRAN DESAI – MULTICULTURALISM AND POST-COLONIALISM AUTHOR

On the other hand, Kiran Desai is the product of multiculturalism and post-colonialism, an immigrant, well read, well bred, whose rootlessness itself has become a kind of shelter. She travels amid three geographical locations inheriting different cultures from her kinship with India (Kalimpong, Gujrat), England and USA which gives her the wide perspectives on the ideas of exile, dislocation and displacement. It was her inheritance and disinheritance that has come with globalization of which she talks in her novel, IL. In the modern world, we have moved from an isolated, slow growing economy to one that is growing faster and beginning to integrate with the global economy. The transition began with liberalization but it remains incomplete.

FOCUS ON RURAL INDIA

Liberalization has benefited only a fraction of India, the organized economy and urban Indians. It has yet to reach the largest part of our country so that the rural Indians can also live with dignity and freedom. So, this is the reason perhaps why Kiran Desai moved towards rural area and tried to give us a glimpse how these people still struggle to meet even their basic needs as when Sai thinks of Penna Lal, “a few clothes hung over a string, a single razor blade . . . a broken watch that would cost too much to mend, but was still too precious to throw away” (IL13). Kiran belongs to the time when Anglophone literature is being created by a remarkably transnational, multicultural group of writers exploring many of the same concerns, including the intersecting effects of colonialism, decolonization, migration, and globalization. In this way both the writers belong to their times.

DISPLACED CHARACTERS

In IL, almost every character is a displaced individual who struggles to invent a life out of place away from their ancestral home and homeland. Set partly in USA and partly in India, Kiran Desai describes her novel as a book that “tries to capture what it means to live between East and West and what it means to be an immigrant” (Ghosh 13). While in VC, Anita Desai uses polyphonic narrative to enlarge upon the theme of urban alienation of displaced people in Post-independence India. The callousness of the metropolis Calcutta is evoked through a spirit of the place that pervades the novel. Meena Beliappa remarks, Anita Desai, “seeks to relate the subjective world of the individual to the spirit of the place” (26). Nirode rebels against the traditional notion of love and family, and struggles to settle down to a bohemian life of “three drinks a night and a room of one’s own” (VC 13), yet this longing for “shadows, silences, stillness,” in contrast to the “light of success” that his younger brother, Arun, pursues in studying abroad, remains unfulfilled (VC 10, 8). As Usha Bande observes, “...as Nirode’s basic needs have been frustrated, he alienates himself from his essential nature, his value system is damaged. He accepts neurotic values, thereby developing neurotic wants which are destructive, both for self and for others” (73). Monisha and Amla also feel alienated from their middle class upbringing because of its lack of creative fulfillment. Nirode’s sister Monisha, who comes to Calcutta when her husband Jiban is transferred there, identifies Calcutta with “City of Kali, goddess of death” (VC 137). Monisha trapped in domesticity, feels stifled by responsibility, until love and communication remain no longer possible. It intensifies the claustrophobia experienced by her in the joint family of her in-laws, “It makes you feel lonely, but doesn’t allow you to feel alone” (VC 138). Monisha, Nirode’s sister, in VC does not possess ‘homeostasis’ or the capacity to adjust easily and naturally to a changed set of circumstances and ends up in committing suicide. She is too stifled by her surroundings and the tradition bound household in which “feet before faces” (VC 109) syndrome rules. Since she has not been able to bear a child because her fallopian tubes are blocked, she is consigned to an obscure room on the top of the house. The choice, she had long realized, has existed only between two options, “it is a choice between death and mean existence and that, surely, is not a difficult choice” (VC 121).

Monisha’s suicide inscribes the message that she was unable to express in words, the importance of reaching out to others. Amla outwardly less of a recluse, nevertheless suffers a similar sense of alienation when their aunt Leila says, “Amla was melancholy . . . The thread of communication was broken, she saw how friable it had been” (VC 179). Faced with the failure of language, her love for the artist Dharma “became one uncontrollable desire to communicate” (VC 193). They all become the strangers to each other. Amla sees that both Nirode and Monisha are in a similar predicament and concludes, “What point was there in asking one stranger about another?” (VC 232)

A MÉLANGE OF INTERCONNECTED STORIES

IL is a mélange of interconnected stories about various losses inherited by a group of uprooted and isolated characters: Jemubhai Patel, son of a well reputed Patel family of Gujrat, the self-hating misanthrope and a living artifact of colonialism, is alienated from his own culture and identity. In a completely alien West world, he feels hesitant and timid to go out and talk and deal with people comfortably. Jemu actually remains conscious and ashamed of his brown colour, Indian accent, pronunciation and above all, the despising as well as discriminatory racial looks of the whites. The judge becomes a split psyche as a result of discrimination, alienation, isolation, and the feeling of marginalization. In him, Kiran Desai has very precisely portrayed the suppressed psyche of a young Indian among the white Britishers:

For the entire day nobody spoke to him at all, his throat jammed with words unuttered, his heart and mind turned into blunt aching things, and elderly ladies, even the hapless -blue-haired, spotted, faces like collapsing pumpkins – moved over when he sat next to them in the bus . . . the young and beautiful were no kinder . . . girls held their noses and giggled, “phew, he stinks of curry! (IL 39)

Jemu is also a self-alienated personality. This self-alienation can also be seen when he tries to humiliate Gyan, Sai’s maths tutor, by asking him to recite a poem. In truth, Gyan reminds the judge of himself as a young man and the shame when asked to deliver a poem from memory during the examination at the ICS at Cambridge. He feels compelled to belittle Gyan in order to create a distance between the two of them and thus between himself and his past. So, as narrator says, “He had learned to take refuse in the third person and to keep everyone at bay, to keep even himself away from himself like Queen” (IL111), and “He envied the English. He loathed Indians” (IL119). Thus he had become a foreigner to everyone including himself, “He retreated into a solitude that grew in weight day by day. The solitude became a habit, the habit became the man, and it crushed him into a shadow (IL 39).

Nimi, the judge's wife, also puts towards a depressive state of mind due to the intense humiliation and isolation from her husband's hand. She withdraws herself in silence, "She had fallen out of life altogether. Weeks went by and she spoke to nobody . . ." (IL 172). Their granddaughter Sai who has no parents, no home, no roots, no plans and no memories also suffers from alienation in the alien land. The only person to show love to the child is the old maternal cook Penna Lal. But even, "their friendship composed of shallow things conducted in a broken language, for she was an English-speaker and he was a Hindi speaker. The brokenness made it easier never to go deep, never to enter into anything that required an intricate vocabulary" (IL 19). For Sai, it is a win some and loses some situation. She is the self-involved orphan. She feels even unable to cry over the death of her parents, "The emotional immediacy of their existence had long vanished. She tried to cry, but she couldn't" (IL 28). In a country full of relatives, Sai suffered a dearth of affinity with any member of the family. Penna Lal, the ridiculed cook and his immigrant son, Biju, a displaced individual; and Gyan, the confused and craven Gorkha are also alienated as well as displaced personalities. Biju, like judge represents the difficult issues of leaving one's homeland and the alienation that he felt abroad. The characters in this novel trek across vast expanses of geography, and when they do nestle in niches in the lush mountains of northeastern India at the foot of the majestic Kanchenjunga, they remains as alien and 'other' as temporary migrants; not only to their external surroundings but most troublingly to themselves.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

Thus, both the writers highlighted the issues of those people who had settled down somewhere in the corner of the earth but not in their homeland. They portrayed the issues which they faced in the adopted land and how they feel themselves alienated in that very place. but there where there characters who have problem in their house and can't feel comfortable with their husbands or wives, that uncomfertability leads them alienation

WORKS CITED

- Agarwal, Nilanshu Kumar, "Accomplished verses Jeopardized Literary Excellence: A Comparative Study of Amitav Ghosh's The Hungry Tide and Kiran Desai's The Inheritance of Loss." Pradhan 21-42. Print.
- Alienation." Britannica Perspectives. Vol. 2. London: William Benton, 1968. Print.
- Alienation." Encyclopaedia Britannica. Vol. 1. London: Print.
- Bande, Usha. The Novels of Anita Desai: A Study in Character and Conflict. New Delhi: Prestige Books, 1968. Print.
- Beliappa, Meena. Anita Desai: A Study of Her Fiction. Calcutta: Writer's Workshop, 1971. Print.
- Desai, Anita. Voices in the City. New ed. New Delhi: Orient, 2005. Print.
- Deasi, Kiran. The Inheritance of Loss. New Delhi: Penguin Books, 2006. Print.
- Ghosh, Tapan. K. "Kiran Desai: Life and works." The Fiction of Kiran Desai: Focus on "The Inheritance of Loss". Ed. Tapan K. Ghosh. New Delhi: Prestige, 2009. 9-18. Print.
- Kundera, Milan. The Unbearable Lightness of Being. New Delhi: Harper Collins, 1999. Print.
- Mathur, Hari Mohan. "Gender Biases in Resettlement Planning." Displaced by Development: Confronting Marginalisation and Gender Injustice. Ed. Lyla Mehta. New Delhi: Sage pub., 2009. 166-194. Print.
- Paul, Edwards, ed. "Alienation" The Encyclopedia of Philosophy. NK: Macmillan. 1967. Print.
- Raizada, Harish. Indian English Novelists: Some Points of View. Delhi: K. K. Publications, 1996. Print.
- Vijyashree, C. "The Politics and Poetics of Expatriation: The Indian Version(s)." Interrogating Post-Colonialism: Theory, Text and Context. Eds. Harish Trivedi and Meenakshi Mukherjee. Simla: Indian Institute of Advanced Study, 1996. Print.